GORGEOUS JAPANESE IRIS

Special Offer of Transplanted Plants

These will bring all the splendor of the Orient to your garden. A symphony of colors, with flowers of graceful shape borne on sturdy upright stems. Japanese Iris are incomparable. Being perfectly hardy, they may now be planted wherever soil and season permit. I offer named varieties in colors that blend well.

Transplanted plants with a fine, fibrous root system

These well-rooted plants should not be confused with small divisions. They will thrive in any garden soil and give big results the first season.

INTRODUCTION

The Japanese Irises described in this little booklet are comparatively new to America and Americans. To lovers of these flowers, a great opportunity is afforded of adding to their collection new colors of such exquisite beauty as have never before been offered in this country.

This wonderful collection was imported by me direct from Japan, as an un-named assortment of seedlings raised by an eminent Japanese Iris enthusiast. The entire collection, originally comprising many thousands of plants, was planted out for trial, from which I have selected, named and described those in the following pages.

These varieties, I know from my years of experience as a grower of bulbs and plants, are all of exceptional merit, and from what I have seen of the collections offered by other growers, and exhibited at various shows throughout the country, I am convinced that no finer Japanese Iris exist than my "Gardenville" collection.

The descriptions have been carefully made in my own fields as the plants bloomed. All varieties have been carefully grown and labelled under numbers corresponding to the names, so that customers are reasonably sure of getting exactly what they order.

Although I have a plentiful stock of most varieties, there are others that are limited in number; for this reason I shall fill orders in strict rotation as received, which makes it evident that those who order at once have the advantage of a larger and better choice.

JAPANESE IRIS—(Iris Kaempferi)

This beautiful race of Irises, known as Iris Kaempferi, is rapidly gaining popularity in gardens where climate and soil conditions are suited to its cultivation. After all, these Irises are not epicurean in their habits, and respond readily to the ordinary treatment given to herbaceous plants in general, and withstand our severest winters with the protection of a thick but light litter covering. Some folks have a false idea that they need abundance of moisture, but this is only true during the growing and flowering season.

They grow equally well in a sandy peaty loam or in mellow clay, the subsoil preferably cool and moist. The surface should be well cultivated and not allowed to bake. Flooding with water is unnecessary, and when planted in their ideal location; near ponds or streams, care should be taken that the roots are well above the high-water level.

Japanese Irises produce a wonderful effect planted unstintedly and in broken, irregular masses. They naturalize well in grass and are especially beautiful adjacent to ponds, lakes or streams. Every herbaceous border should have its share of them, planted at intervals, in large clumps, of from 12 to 18 roots each.

Spring is the best time to transplant, although equally good results are obtained from August and September plantings. In late fall, when frost has nipped them, the withered stems and foliage should be removed and a litter of strawy manure placed over the roots.

Terms and Shipping Instructions

Order Early

Do not wait until you are ready to plant, before ordering. Send in your order now, we will exercise expediency in dispatching your order, and if the season is not right for planting we will tell you so.

Be Explicit In Ordering

All orders should be written plainly (this will insure against mistakes), stating the method of transit, whether by express, freight or parcel post. Write plainly the Post Office, express, or freight stations, as the case may be, and sign your name and address plainly. All Canadian orders are sent by express. If no instructions as to method of shipment are given, we shall use our best judgment. All plants are labeled and carefully packed and delivered to the forwarders in good condition. They travel at the purchaser's risk, and should loss occur by delay in transit or accident by the forwarders, they and not we, must be held responsible. All shipments received in a damaged condition should be accepted and signed for as "damaged in transit." Claim should immediately be made upon the carriers for loss.

Terms

Cash with order is requested from all correspondents unknown to us. Accounts opened for those who send satisfactory references are due 30 days net.

Discount

For orders of more than twenty divisions in one shipment, a discount of 25% will be allowed off list prices.
